Deeper, loathed melancholy,
Of darkest and blackest midnight born
In solitary woods forlorn;
Amongst bentel chaps, and shrubs, and sights unholy
Find out some uncouth cell,
Where brooding darkness spreads his foul wings
And the night-raven sings;
There, under ebon shades and low-browed rocks,
As caged as thy locks,
In dark communion doest thou dwell
Dull come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven's gatest euphony,
And by moon hear beaming mirth;
* * * * *
Part thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful gallantry,
Quips and cracks and wondrous wiles,
And under garb and modest smiles,
Such as hang on peacock's feathers,
And love to live in dimpled sleep;
Sooth that wrinkled care divides,
And laughter holding both his sides,
Come, and sip it, as you go,
On the light fantastic toe,
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain nymph, sweet liberty;
And if I give thee honest dues,
Nymph, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her and live with thee,
In unprovoked pleasures true.

History of 1900

AVIDSONIENIS had for half a century held an undisputed reputation as a seat of learning and culture, and had enjoyed a long reign of peace, when suddenly in September, 1896, its inhabitants were alarmed by the approach of an uncivilized horde, demanding not only admittance but the full rights of citizenship.

These were the sons of Nun. Some three thousand years after the glorious exploits of their ancestor they had become dissatisfied with their condition of ignorance and barbarism and had determined to win for themselves the rare privileges, which they had heard were enjoyed at Davidsoniensis, or die in the attempt.

Accordingly they chose for themselves a leader whom they found worthy to bear the name of Cato.

The inhabitants of the city had for so long a time been engaged in the pursuit of learning that they were entirely unused to hostilities and were greatly terrified at the formidable appearance of the enemy.

The military forces, composed entirely of the lower classes, called Sophos-Moros, were hastily called together and put into campaign order while the barbaric host was still on the other side of the river.

All the bridges were immediately burned, contrary to a recent law of the city, thus compelling us to ford the river. The sight of the torrent aroused some little fear in our host, but we could not afford to turn back, though there were among us many tender youths who had great difficulty in stemming the flood.

All came safely to land, and we soon learned that one of the great leaders of the enemy had been exiled for violating the laws in resorting to this means of delaying our advance.

We had not long to wait for a fight, for there was pluck in the inhabitants. But what was our surprise when we encountered, not cannon-balls nor rifle-balls, but base-balls, fired by a well-trained battery.

Jennings was put in command of a division with orders to charge the battery. After haranguing his troops, and being assured in turn that they too were well trained in this mode of warfare, he made the assault and speedily routed the foe.

They retired in disorder and dismay, and demanded the support of the patrician classes, which was cheerfully granted; but again they were defeated.

Then they sent letters to the neighboring province imploring aid, but all in vain, for Jennings and his men held their ground.

Then it was perceived that Jennings was not to be conquered, so they gave over the fight in that quarter until the next season and turned their forces against our second division under Brown. Moreover, they perceived that their weapons and tactics were at fault, and they changed both, using foot-balls and entrenching themselves where the land was well marked so that our retreat or advance could be carefully watched.

But Brown was on the alert, and although his men were totally unskilled in this mode of warfare, he himself had learned it before and he drilled them daily.

In the first skirmish he was defeated, which he perceived to be due to the fact that our men were much superior in stature to those of the enemy.

History of 1900—Continued

In the next fight he resorted to strategy. The left wing under the command of Wallace feigned an attack, while the right under Nettles passed to the rear, and the heavy armed under Rankin charged the center.

The victory was ours, but the fight was soon renewed with doubtful results, and finally abandoned until the next season.

The forces were disbanded during the summer months.

When hostilities recommenced it was found that some of our men had deserted, and the men of Brown's division, now under Fitzpatrick, emboldened by their successes of the year before, had become overconfident and were defeated, though the fight was a hard one. It was as night was coming on that they were driven from the field.

Not so with Jennings and his men. They were as indomitable as ever, and the enemy had to give up the fight in despair in spite of all the aid they could get.

It was well for us that they did, for by the next season many of our men had left us. Some became weary of the struggle, others had heard of cities which they considered more desirable dwelling places than Davidsonienseis, and still others, we regret to say, had shamefully turned upon some newcomers who were seeking what we had sought two years before. These had to be exiled.

At this time we had a light-armed corps in the field which was devastating the land. The enemy set apart a day in the spring on which these should be pursued and captured. But when the day arrived, after pursuing them for a thousand paces, they looked up and our colors were still flying in the wind.

By this time we had made great progress toward civilization. Most of those who had inhabited the city at the time of our evasion had passed away and those who remained were unequal to the task of expelling us.

The city was now filled with men who had come in after us and bore us no ill feeling. So it was that hostilities for the most part ceased.

Nevertheless, there always existed a hostile feeling between our men and the remnant of those we had found here, and the next year they challenged us to combat.

Although we were so much reduced in numbers that it was a difficult matter to get a force on the field, we met them.

We shall never forget that day when we were forced upon the field in a drizzling rain, when the men could hardly stand in the mud, when all were predicting our defeat without sympathy, when all was confidence in the ranks of the enemy and their exultation was expressed on every face. Nor shall we forget the fire and determination in the eyes of our men as they bravely lined up. There never was such a spirit felt among us as when the enemy withdrew, having failed to conquer us.

That battle in the rain laid one of our heroes, for a long season upon the bed from which he had risen to enter it, and when the challenge came again there was no one to fill his place; even though one of our one-armed veterans offered his services.

But what use, think you, we made of the coveted opportunities for which we fought so hard.

From the time we first took up our abode here, Dr. Grey and Dr. Harding, both liberal-minded men and ever anxious for the civilization of the world, had agreed to help us to the attainment of the much-desired learning. But even they had some of the patrician spirit, and did this only on condition that we would not usurp the privileges of citizens by using horses or attempting to travel the "Highway to Learning."

For the first year these conditions were shamefully disregarded, and indeed we were so much taken up with the fighting that progress along this line was nothing to boast of. But the next year new men joined us, men of prodigious minds who took the lead in scholarship, and since that time our reputation has been almost unrivaled.

In the third year one-third of our entire number were placed upon the roll of the honored, though there were some who failed to do us credit.

It was under Dr. Shearer that we took up the study of sacred things. Somehow we were not sufficiently civilized to appreciate sacred matters, and even yet there are few among us who seem to be destined to become religious leaders. Dr. Smith, always obliging, undertook to instruct us in natural philosophy.

Now there were some few among us who, as is natural with the uncivilized, were much readier with their hands than their minds. These, in attempting to put some of Dr. Smith's natural philosophy into practice, came near burning the citadel.

Then there was a squad of young fighters who lacked patience and attempted to take Fort Math by storm, but from it there came such a volley of zeroes that they fled and are to this day in shame attempting to make amends, but all in vain. We hope that they may succeed before May 30th, when we are to go forth to give the world the benefit of all that we have acquired in these four years of labor, and make room for others.

Beside a reedy, gently sloping shore
The inland river slowly flows along;
From far away there comes the rapid's roar,
By distance softened to a murmur'ing song.

Prospectus

LOOKING back over the ages we find that now and then the entrance of some one man upon his career has marked an epoch in history. What is to be the effect when this class of nineteen hundred steps into the world?

Judging from the college record, we may venture a few predictions.

"Peaks" King, whose grandeur of appearance and awe-inspiring presence are rivaled only by the peaks of the Himalayas, is soon, with the support of the mighty "Persian," to establish an empire.

"Judge" Walsh is to be Chief Justice. Now the "Law," precise and well defined, contrary to your expectations, will be no insignificant affair; nevertheless, in this well-governed empire you need expect little disturbance of the peace and the Judge will be hard put to it to find employment for himself. But he is not to be outdone. From Aristophanes' "Wasps" he has lately gained valuable suggestions, and the trial of the house-dog made such an impression upon him that we would advise our watch-dog "Growler" Robinson to be exceedingly careful about the performance of his duty.

Hoffman, a born skeptic in philosophy and astronomy, as everybody knows, is to propound a new philosophy, that all things consist in music. Like other heroes, he is destined to give his life for his cause. Enchanted and transfixed by the music of the spheres, he must wither and be swept away by the "Wind-y" singing the requiem in the same old monotonous tone.

Hoffman is a modest man, and we may well fear that he will be slow to put his views before the world. But Humphreys, who has no such feelings and doesn't believe in letting anybody suffer for what they ought to know, has already accepted the new doctrine, as he does the thoughts of all wise men, and will e'er long publish the treatise along with a dictionary of the terminology.

Poor Lake Cely can never know of all this. He slipped his dam on English examination and ran dry.

Thomason is another unfortunate. He went out one moon-light night looking for something that wasn't lost, and in some mysterious way got inked to such an extent that it will be necessary to keep him out of civilized parts. In all probability he will be sent as Satrap of Ethiopia.

To Hewitt, always known as a man of valor and untiring energy, is to be assigned the herculean task of silencing Charlie McGinn, the man who looks like a bear.

Morton has shown himself a man of ability along so many lines that we fear he will never find his sphere. Perhaps he may set up a meat market, and pull the wool over the eyes of many a fair servant girl while he sells her goat and calls it "mutton."

Thompson has become so much attached to Dr. Smith that he can never leave him. So you may expect to find him at Davidson studying physics for some years to come.

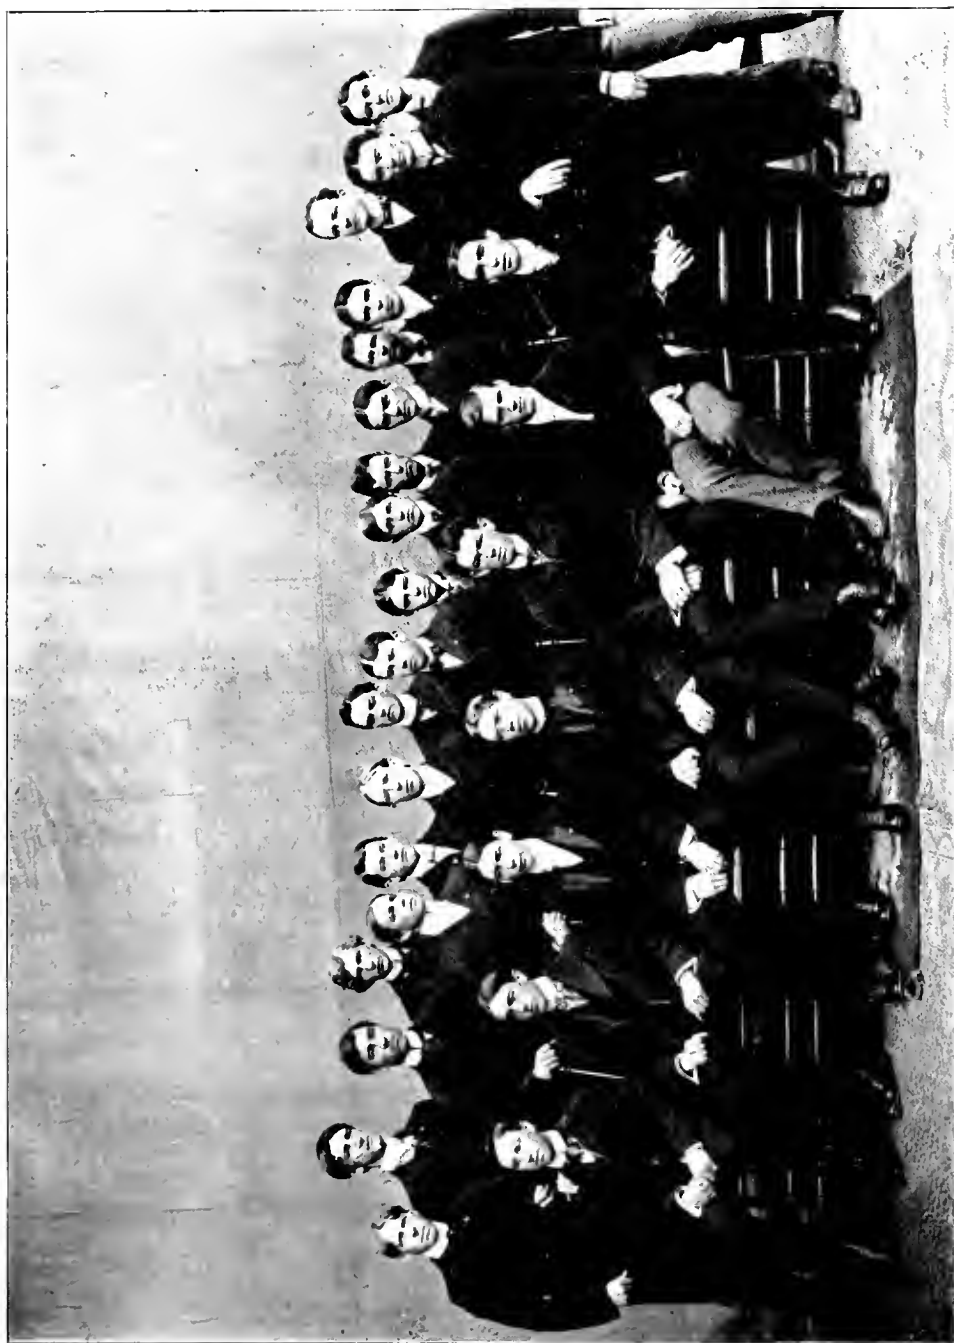

There is no doubt that this prosperous land of ours will become over-populated. Then you may expect to find "Sticky" Hill firmly stuck in the Dismal Swamp providing a dwelling place for the posterity of his classmates.

Finally, fellow classmates, may the lustre of our light nor the ardor of our spirit never be dimmed e'er we meet again around our dear old "Hall" where it shall forever be symbolized.

Listen to the "Mocking Bird" while he sings the everlasting praises of nineteen hundred.

History Class 1901

THE month of September, 1897, found some fifty-one strangers on the campus of Davidson College. To all appearances they knew none of those around them, yet were greeted most heartily and hilariously by the old students—especially the Sophs. It was not an unusual lot of men at first glance, but a closer study showed that there were many remarkable individuals answering to the name of "Fresh." While none were extremely fat, some few were amazingly thin and lengthy; and to counterbalance the effect of our tall men (the tallest of whom measured six feet and six inches) we could show some who were correspondingly short (four feet and eleven inches.) None were unusually green, but on the other hand, many were wise in the ways of the world—having been here for some time. While the majority were men of good understanding, with a fair allotment of common sense, some few were exceeding wise. The entire fifty-one, however, had one common trait—silence, which is the mark of the wise man (especially in the case of Freshmen.) Our first week of college life was made pleasant by several receptions—one by the Y. M. C. A., three or four by the Sophomores.

We held our first class meeting and elected the following officers: President, J. O. Walker; Vice-President, H. P. Brown; Secretary and Treasurer, D. W. Mills. We learned a yell, practiced it (the Sophs being on class) and, having delivered the yell, we wasted no time in hunting our rooms. Oh, gentle reader! if you have never experienced the after results of the first meeting of a Fresh class it is useless for me to attempt a description; if you have had the experience, no description is necessary.

Such was our introduction to college life.

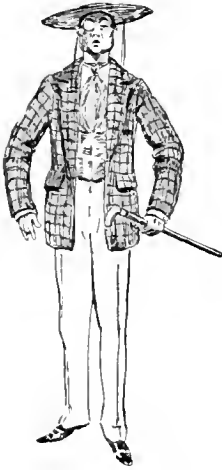

Our first half term was the usual one of Freshmen, study, base-ball and foot-ball, musicals (tin pans and horns) and receptions (principal refreshment being water, served by Sophs).

After the Christmas holidays a distinct change appeared in the class. They no longer kept silent but spoke their opinions most freely, as is the custom with Fresh during their second term. They "shied" recitations and called the professors by nicknames (shame upon them!) They went to Charlotte (and Barium Springs) without permission—and went home with permission. They longed for the time to come when they would be Sophs! That time came on the Saturday night before Commencement as the writer is here to testify.

Our Sophomore year was like unto that of other Soph classes. We wore college caps and striped sweaters, also corduroy trousers. We in turn greeted most hilariously the September strangers and entertained them with musicals and receptions. We smoked pipes, as all Sophs should do. We broke up Fresh meetings and chased the poor innocents clean off the face of the earth, apparently. We called all strangers "Fresh." We looked upon the Seniors as something altogether out of place in such a college as ours; we looked upon the Juniors as our friends and nearer human beings than the Seniors; we looked upon the Fresh as ——— Fresh. To a Sophomore's mind the word Fresh is the most expressive in the English language, and if its equivalent has been found in any other language it has not yet been made public. In fact, we decided that Davidson College was made up of one class, the Sophs, with three other classes and a faculty as side issues.

On the night of the thirteenth of March, 1899, Stewart Inn was in a blaze of splendor, for the Sophs were having their banquet! Truly, that was a grand night for 1901. A feast fit for the gods! Wit sparkled like good wine. Good feeling and brotherly love were at their height, and the very skies wept for envy. (Guess you remember what kind of a night it was.) When we left Stewart Inn at two o'clock in the morning we had established the belief that 1901 was the class of classes—without a peer.

This belief was strengthened by Athletic Day, for we "walked" off with everything worth having, scoring forty-eight points, thirty-six being the highest number scored by any other class.

During this period of our history the "seats of the mighty" were occupied by E. W. Currie, President; J. J. Adams, Vice-President; and E. R. Wharton, Secretary and Treasurer.

But "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall,"—or in other words, "don't monkey with the faculty." For the man who enters his Soph examinations thinking to find a snap had better tie a "Hind's and Noble's Improved Dictionary" around his neck and drown himself in the depths of Lake Wiley. (The lake being in its present condition.)

Thus passed our Soph year, the pleasantest, freest from care, happiest of a college course.

We began our Junior year by choosing our course with due regard to "snaps"—and six of us have been hunting two months for the man who said geology and history ranked among this number. At our first class meeting we elected the following officers: E. R. Wharton, President; L. B. Newell, Vice-President; W. B. McClintock, Secretary and Treasurer. Our class was joined by several new men—Dupuy, formerly of '99; Fitzpatrick and Sherard, formerly of '00; and H. Watt and W. A. Watt.

The record of 1901 for her Junior year has been a most gratifying one. We brought our foot-ball record to a climax by beating the Sophs twenty-nine to nothing—and everyone knows what a team the Sophs had. On the regular college foot-ball team 1901 laid claim to five positions, the Seniors holding three and the Meds holding three. (Fresh and Sophs holding sweaters on the side lines.) On the college base-ball team we have four men, including captain, the remaining five positions being divided among the other three classes and the Meds.

We have nine men in the Glee Club and seven in the Mandolin and Guitar Club.

Our life was one of comparative quiet until some two weeks before the twenty-second of February, when suddenly there began to arise orators upon our campus whose equals are extremely scarce and whose superiors are an unknown quantity (being too numerous to number). All these little streams of oratory were brought into one great torrent at Junior Speaking. Since that event 1901 has lived a life of peace and happiness, though we have not yet recovered from the effects of our oratorical outburst. Whether we shall ever recover remains to be seen.

On last Athletic Day, out of twelve events, 1901 took first place in ten events, second place in two and third place in one, breaking all previous records in the number of points scored—fifty-five

In a month and a half from this writing we shall be Seniors—a fact hard to realize, but true, nevertheless. In glancing over our past record we feel our bosoms swell with pride; in glancing over our class we realize that we are the same old 1901 that stood on the campus as strangers in September, 1897; somewhat diminished in numbers, but the same jolly, independent set, who, as Sophs, took care of the Fresh as Fresh should be taken care of. (Among other things, showing them the shortest way from the "English Room" to the College when snow was on the ground. Some of us are still amazingly thin and lengthy—six feet six), while others are as short as ever (four feet eleven). Some few can write a very creditable article for the "Magazine," and every man in the class can write a very creditable article for—a check. While some of our class are fairly good looking, others of us would take a prize for—well, we're not lonesome. We can have as many men absent from prayers as any other class, and have less absent from breakfast than any other. In fact, quite a remarkable class is 1901—every one says so. Juniors especially. One of our men is married, three would like to be, and all hope to be—provided they can fool the girls with greater success than they have fooled the faculty.

Thus stands 1901 at the close of her Junior year, numbering thirty-one men—jolly, industrious, independent. (Printer will please underline the word industrious, as we want the faculty to see this.) And now, Oh reader! as we draw these annals to a close, we would pray your forbearance for the historian. He is, with the other officers of his class, naturally retiring and of a studious disposition, and, as becomes a historian, modest, veracious and a lover of justice. (Good fellow, aint he?) If he has seemed to boast too much for his class, he pleads loyalty to 1901 as his excuse; if he has suppressed any great and wonderful deeds of his class, he pleads modesty.

So much for the present, but, if the world runs aright a few years longer, the public will undoubtedly hear again from 1901

History of the Class of '02

IN THE fall of '98 there assembled at Davidson the smallest Freshman class that has entered the arena of college life within her walls for several years. Aside from the smallness of our number, however, we differed little from all other Fresh. Of course, we were somewhat green and often easily duped by upper classmen; but greenness is a malady peculiar to all college beginners, and we could not be blamed for having our full share. The boys tendered us the usual cordial reception, and soon made us acquainted with some of the ups and downs of college life. In their kindness they did all in their power to keep us cool and refreshed; treated us often to the invigorating shower bath; and gave us much practice in oratory, dancing and other forms of healthful exercise. In spite of so much attention, however, some found time to think of organizing, feeling, no doubt, that in union there is strength. Everything was so carefully planned that before our friends of the second year even had any suspicion that such a thing as class spirit existed among our disorganized numbers, all was over. A quorum assembled in the church parlor at night, and by the light of the fitful moonbeams, as they shone through the windows, hastily organized and then quietly dispersed; for the Sophs, their suspicions having been aroused by the notable scarcity of Fresh at college, had already begun their search which lasted till late in the night. The scenes which followed when the searchers found themselves outwitted, beggars description. They who were luckless enough to get caught were made to pay the penalty for those who escaped. And many a poor Fresh that night found the rendering of "Mary's Lamb" a task in comparison with which the Lyric Metres of Horace pale into insignificance.

We buckled down to our studies with a will; and in the class room, if not brilliant, yet we proved able to hold our own with any of our predecessors. With scarce an exception we were willing workers, and made good use of our first days. In athletics, also, our record is one of which we need not be ashamed. Three times in the Fall we crossed bats with the Sophs, and were successful in all save the first. Again in the Spring we easily vanquished the Sophs, and also the Juniors. At the same time, with only three fielders from the town, we more than once won the laurels over the college team. In foot-ball we were greatly handicapped by our scarcity of men; and as a consequence made no record on the gridiron during this part of our course. Only those who have themselves traveled the road along which all Fresh must pass, can appreciate the feelings of pleasure with which we hailed the approach of the Christmas recess. Those dreadful examination days passed all too slowly; but at last they were over. And it was with light and joyful hearts that we bade one another a "Merry Christmas" and "A Happy New Year" before separating for our homes. Two or three of our men dropped out at the end of this term. We who did return came with somewhat greater courage than we had felt in the Fall, for we were now acquainted with the place, and readily felt at home. On Field Day we took an active part in the contests, but here again men were lacking to choose from. Although we did not win special distinction for ourselves, yet we are not ashamed of what was done. In baseball, however, as stated above, we carried off the highest honors. As was to be expected the Sophomores gave us their undivided attention as Commencement approached; but we didn't mind it so much now, for we felt sure that our time would soon come. Often when our lot seemed specially hard did we console ourselves with the comforting thought that next year it would be our privilege to train the Fresh up in the way they should go. But alas! All our fondly cherished plans were doomed to be nipped in the bud.

The roll call in the Fall of '99 found several of our old men missing, but two or three new ones have joined the ranks and help to fill up the vacant places. As the loud cry of Boomalacka, boomalacka, boomala-boo!

Razzle, dazzle, Orange and Blue!
Wah-he-woo hulabaloo!
Rah, rah, rah, ninteen two!

woke up the echoes of the old college halls and floated out across the campus in the early Fall, all who heard it understood that we fully appreciated our change of position, and had already donned the toga Virilis of college life. For the first few days our feelings ran riot, and the usually quiet old place seemed to have just aroused itself from a twenty years' nap. But, as intimated above, all our plans relating to the well being of the Fresh were suddenly crushed. The Faculty, seconded by the Student body, cast the protecting shadow of their wings about the campus goslings, and in an unchangeable edict set forth the fact that the freshing must stop. While to some of our number it seemed hard that we were not allowed to pass along to our followers what we had in abundance received, yet as a whole we gladly welcomed the change. And as a class we will stand among the first to see that the principle of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" is faithfully maintained.

In the fall of this year, having lost two of our best players, we were twice defeated on the diamond. With much practice, however, and hard playing, we hope to yet come off with the championship. In foot ball, only eleven men could be mustered on the field. After two days' practice, these faithful few lined-up against the Fresh and defeated them by a score of five to nothing. In the line-up against the Juniors, plenty of practice in addition to superior weights told against us, and we were easily defeated.

On the whole, our class has thus far been a quiet and peaceful one. We have made no great epochs, but whatever falls within the pale of our duty, we strive to do with our might. What our futures are to be it is impossible to tell. But, to each and all of you, my dear comrades, do I wish that there may be a record in life both in college and elsewhere, as pure and successful as our united record has been for the past two years. Doubtless, if some master mind could lift aside the curtain which veils the unknown future he would find not a few from our little band, small though it is, fulfilling our motto by rapid strides—

"PER ANGUSTA AD AUGUSTA."

History of the Class of 1903

BEFORE beginning to recount the doings of the Class of '03, the historian begs the reader to look beyond the imperfections of his narrative, and to concentrate his attention solely upon the achievements of his class.

On September 7, 1899, was gathered together the largest class of Freshmen in the history of Davidson for many years. They came from all over our sunny Southland. We were welcomed by the Sophomores as only Sophomores know how to welcome, and for the first few days we thought discretion the better part of valor and kept in our rooms. And yet the warmth with which we were received was not unmixed with coolness, for whenever a Freshman showed himself he was met with a shower of pure (?) water. One picture rises painfully to our mind. A group of Freshmen seated around a table wrestling with their Ciceros and Latin Grammars. A generous (?) Soph is assisting them, when suddenly a sound of many feet is heard outside, the door is opened, and it seems to the Freshmen as if they were in a second Flood. But persecution unites more quickly than anything else, and soon the greenest of the green knew friend from foe. We decided to meet and organize, and word was secretly passed the night of the Fresh reception that we would meet the next morning. So just four days after we had been here we met, while the Sophs were on class, in the Old Chapel and organized. The officers were: H. H. Caldwell, President; J. H. McLaine, Vice-President; Tom Sprunt, Secretary, and J. W. McKay, Historian. Imagine the chagrin and discomfiture of the Sophomores, who had laid deep plots to break up our meeting, when they heard our yell given in the very middle of the campus, and in the daytime. From that eventful morning '03 began to climb the ladder which leads to fame. In athletics our class has taken a prominent part. We first tested our strength by crossing bats with the Sophs and the game resulted in our being victorious by a score of 11 to 5. But the Sophs did not believe in "letting well enough alone," and again challenged us, and this time they were defeated worse than they were before, the score being 14 to 6.

On the foot ball field fortune smiled upon us as she had in other things. Two of our men held places on the College team, and one was substitute. On the scrub team we were also well represented, and it is needless to say that they all played their parts well. There were no games between the classes, but if there had been we feel confident that '03 would have been among the best. In all the contests in which we were allowed to participate we were either victorious or among the very first. In our studies, if not brilliant, we were at least willing workers, and honor will always come to whom honor is due. With a bright future before us, the Class of 1903 bids fair to fulfill our motto,

"PRODESSE QUAM CONSPICI."

Class History

EVERYTHING has some history, whether great or small.

The accounts of the rise and progress of many organizations have been recorded on the printed page and are now found to be an important part of the history of our country. Such facts are often referred to as authority, so we feel the responsibility of putting down in black and white anything that can be called a history of the first and at the present time the only chartered medical college in North Carolina. We feel a delicacy in attempting such a task, but at the same time are proud of the progress of our institution, and of its prospects for the future. We cannot confine ourselves to one body and call it a class history, for we have no such distinct divisions, but altogether compose one class and one college. It would then be impossible to tell when the class entered and when it will leave, for we have not yet reached sufficient numbers to call for such a division among our men.

The institution was founded in 1886 as a preparatory school of medicine with a course of instruction extending over one year. It was chartered as the North Carolina Medical College in 1893; the building now occupied was erected in 1895, and to-day we find the college in a flourishing condition with five professors and thirty-six (36) students, in a beautiful brick building with two large lecture rooms, supplied with water works and lighted with electric lights. In addition to this we have two well equipped laboratories, a comfortably furnished hospital, and a dissecting hall.

There has also been noticed during the past few years a marked advance among our students, socially, morally and physically.

A Y. M. C. A. was organized two years ago, and though few medical colleges can boast of good religious influences ours has been one worthy of some praise, and now we have a Y. M. C. A. that is doing good work, and with the assistance of three preachers that we have in our number we should look for much more interest in the future.

Socially the "Meds" are here partially overshadowed by the tact and wisdom of our college friends and often feel that we are unwelcome visitors to the fair sex, but such should not be the case when we recall the kind and hearty co-operation they have given us in our receptions, and the generous welcome we have received whenever we dared call at their homes. During the past year we were at one time very hospitably entertained at the home of a member of our faculty. On another occasion our Y. M. C. A. gave an anniversary reception and the pleasure given us there by the presence of the ladies of our town certainly showed no lack of interest in us.

In athletics we can justly say that a knowledge of the modus operandi of the Biceps, Triceps, the Gastrocnemius, and the Rectus Femoris cannot make us deficient in muscular activity. On the foot ball field the success of the college team was due in a great measure to men selected from our class. We also had a strong foot ball team of our own, and if the series of class games had been played this year, all must admit that the "Meds" would have been in close reach of the silver cup. In base ball we find our men on the diamond holding important places on the college nine. We also have a Med team always in readiness to meet the challenges of the other classes. In tennis also the "Meds" do not fail to show their skill, for in the last tennis tournament two of our players were close contestants with the champions of the season. Nor will Athletic Day be without our representatives, for who is better able to undergo the training for such a contest, or more capable of combining mind and body than men perfectly familiar with the anatomy of their parts. We are not lacking in material, for several of our men already hold athletic medals, and unless there is a struggle on the part of the others the "Red and White" will be carried to the front.

We might mention many other things about our college but fear that they will be uninteresting to the reader as well as out of place in an annual. We must then close our attempted history with the hope that in another year the writing of it will fall into more competent hands.

"AN EASTER IDYL"

An Easter Idyl

It was à propos of the Easter hat,
And she with a tiny scream
Cried, "There, now what do you think of that;
Isn't it just a dream!"

Full long he gazed at the wondrous plan,
And then full slowly spoke:
"A dream, you say,"—the horrid man—
"I call it a monstrous joke."

A dainty pout her bright lips wore;
He smiled and coughed, and said,
"A joke, because it goes quite o'er
A pretty woman's head."

She gasped and blushed and sighed a sigh,
With smile both wan and sad,
And wondered what was the reason why
The men would be so bad. P.

DAVIDSON'S chief fault, though her admirers are loth to admit that she has any, seems to be ultra-conservatism. But time mends all things and we find this blot fast vanishing, for have not our boys taken part with other Inter-Collegiate Athletics, have not women long been admitted to a chosen few of her classes, and lastly, but by no means leastly, have not several precious pages of "Quips and Cranks" been intrusted to feminine hands? Quo Vadis?

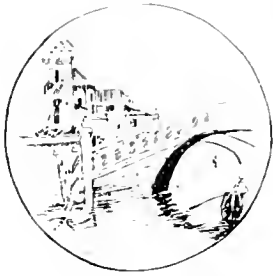

In giving these pages to the public we wish to dedicate them to the Senior Class, those so soon breaking their college ties of love and friendship, those to whom we owe so much of the pleasure of the past four years. They leave us—to forget us, but to us, though "lost to sight they are still to memory dear."

We fully appreciate the pleasures and privileges of life in a college town, from the years of a college bud to those of a full-blown rose, called in unholy derision—college widow. And yet, the sadness of it all, the friendships made and broken, the elastic quality of one's affections, and alter all, "the sigh for the touch of a vanished hand, the sound of a voice that is still"—making love to other maids!

We are not given a place in the Catalogue as members of the Faculty, but we beg to announce ourselves as Professors of the Chair of "How to Do and How to Don't." (It is unnecessary to say that said chair has oft to be repaired.) As this course is eclectic, we might add that students are enrolled at any time; Spring, however, being considered the most favorable season. Recitations held from early morn till dewy eve, applicants being permitted to choose class or private lessons.

We wish to thank the Editors for this space in the Annual, and beg their kindly consideration and that of the college world at large for this—our maiden effort.

Ode to the Midnight Howlers

TELL me not in idle numbers
Serenaders are a dream!
For a college girl ne'er slumbers
When their shadowy forms are seen

Boys are real! boys are hungry!
And a plate of cakes their aim;
With guitars and voices pleading,
They go forth to seek the same.

Toward refreshment and not slumber,
Their ambition points at night,
With a set determination
To deserve at least one bite.

Let us then be up and hunting
For the cake they come to seek,
That they may not be discouraged
And from waiting long grow weak.

Time is short, the boys impatient,
And in haste we ope the door,
Startled by the burst of music,
Drop the cake upon the floor.

But a hungry canine wanderer
Softly on the porch does steal;
Touched by kindness unexpected,
Makes a hasty midnight meal!

Oh, ye cake-less serenaders!
Next time sentinels please bring,
To repulse the canine wanderers,
Watch for cake, and let you sing.

The Freshman's Luck

THE Freshman mounted and rode away
To an unknown land for a nine months' stay.
With many ambitions his young brain teemed,
Things he had read and many times dreamed.

Back home again, with the closing year,
And then what marvels we had to hear;
What tales of things he had dared and done
Since he first left home, when life begun.

From well-aimed buckets of water galore,
Of thrilling escapes he'd had four-score.
And the stories scented of mysteries, too,
Most marvelous, but at the same time true.

His college career had had many joys!
He knew all the mischief of all the boys.
But when he was asked of books
to tell,
His face, as he had done, quickly
fell!

Co-Ed at the Game

(WITH APOLOGIES TO MR. KIPLING)

"WHAT is the whistle blowin' for?" said Co-Ed at the Game.

"To start 'em off! to start 'em off!" the Senior's answer came.

"What makes them look so fierce, so fierce?" said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They're keepin' up their courage," the Senior's answer came.

*They are lined up for the battle which is comin' off to-day;
They've taken of their sweaters off, they've thrown their caps away;
They're sizin' up their enemies, they're glarin' at their prey,
And they'll make a reputation ere the mornin'.*

"What makes the small man breathe so hard?" Said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They've got his wind! They've got his wind!" the Senior's answer came.

"What makes the front rank man fall down?" said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They've tackled him, they've tackled him!" the Senior's answer came.

*They're rushin' thro' the centre, you can hear them breathin' now;
They're pushin', they're battlin', you can see them sway and bow,
They're shakin' of their tangled locks, they're bending very low,
And they'll make a reputation ere the mornin'.*

"What makes them shake their fists and yell?" Said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They say the Umpire's cheatin'," the senior's answer came.

"And will they eat each other up?" Said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They're much too tough, they're much too tough," the Senior's answer came.

*They're ragin', they're roarin', they're boilin' o'er with wrath,
They're bearin' all before them, they're howlin' long their path;
They're havin' at each other, they're smitin' fore and aft;
And they'll make a reputation ere the mornin'.*

"What's that big procession?" said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They're carryin' off the wounded," the Senior's answer came;

"But will they die, but will they die?" said Co-Ed at the Game.

"They've only spoiled their skeletons," the Senior's answer came.

*They're marchin' forth in triumph, they're cheerin' loud and long;
They're singin' of their victory, you can hear their mighty song.
They're heedin' not their fractures to whom the wounds belong.
For they've made a reputation ere the mornin'.*

In The '60s

THE experiment of co-education had been tried at the University of North Carolina with success, and as there was no school for advanced scholars in the village, in the year '64 six young ladies of our town, five of whom were sisters, were glad to avail themselves of the opportunity offered them by the President to join the classes at the College.

Perhaps, in the absence of our brothers, who had answered the call of their country to war, a spirit of independence, unknown in times of peace, had awakened in our hearts; but we do not remember that any unusual heart beats were felt as we took our places in the class room—(the dread cry of "Fire" was then unknown.)

English, mathematics, and Latin were the studies taken by the young ladies. We were called upon regularly to recite, and were required to attend final examinations, which were given orally. It was customary for a professor from another department to be present at the examination, he being privileged to ask any question he thought proper. This was on more than one occasion the cause of a discussion between the two instructors that consumed a large portion of the time allowed for the examination, greatly to the relief of the waiting students.

Two of our number continued the study of mathematics through the senior year, one leading her class in trigonometry. Latin, however, was our favorite study, and our learned Professor made even old Bullion interesting. The pronunciation of that day was so different from that of the present time that the language would scarcely be recognized by the Latin scholar of to-day. On the election of the President of Davidson College to a professorship at Washington and Lee College, the scheme of co-education at Davidson was abandoned and was not attempted again for more than a quarter of a century. Nevertheless it had been of great benefit to us, furnishing a strong incentive to hard study, at least to the girls.

[Some of the members of this class who were eclipsed by the writer in the race for the Latin prize were Judge H. Baker, of Fla.; Rev. J. Y. Allison, of Baton Rouge, La.; Mr. John Reid, of Mt. Mourne; and Rev. John Rosebro, of Petersburg, Va.—Ed.]

In The '90s

DESPITE the lapse of many years, the life of a Co-Ed in the '90s differs not greatly from that of the '60s, save that we, one and all, plead guilty to many violent heartbeats when we "took our places in the class rooms." Indeed, our knees shook so that, like the toes of "Sentimental Tommy," they seemed to whisper to one another "You let me pass this time. I'll let you pass next." Nor was the fear confined to maidens alone, for manly cheeks were seen to blush and manly voices quivered, and it still requires no small degree of courage on the part of the Professor himself to call upon the bashful maid.

Examinations, we are thankful to say, are written, in this day and time, and so it is known only to the Co-Ed and her Professor how far short of the coveted one-hundreds he falls, and we proudly claim that a few of those "double zeros" have been won. But not enough to startle the world and it can be safely said, that we have broken no records, though Dame Rumor tells of broken hearts and History records that a Science Professor received the only mortal wound.

Then and Now

A MAID has passed her sixteenth year
To her each college man is great,
And all possess, she has no fear,
Ability to run the State.

As merchants they can always trade,
As doctors, cure e'en heart disease.
As tailors, teachers, preachers staid,
There'd be no doubt that they could please.

As lawyers, they must all succeed,
For she could tell with blushing face,
How nobly each his cause can plead,
And almost always win his case.

But twenty-six is now her age,
And if you'd let her have her way
She'd send a cradle to each sage,
And have Puss rock him night and day.

The College Widow

FOR whom is this space set apart?
For one who did this life depart?
Ah, no! For her with a broken heart,
The College Widow!

She's seen the Freshman enter gay,
Thro' four long years of upward way,
Until he leaves Commencement Day,
This College Widow.

She's loved them all, both dark and fair,
With yellow, brown, and auburn hair,
So blithe and bonnie, debonair,
Poor College Widow!

To younger maids she now gives place;
With daintier form and fairer face,
With whom she never can keep pace,
Slow College Widow.

Fond hopes have stirred her youthful breast,
Encircling arms have round her pres't,
But now she has unending rest,
Dead College Widow!

Co-Ed Statistics

THE request from the editors that we should furnish Co-Ed Statistics strack terror to our hearts, and we saw visions and dreamed dreams of fusses, rows, quarrels, splits, blighted hopes—yea, and broken hearts that might result. But the Co-Ed-in-Chief was firm and said it must be done, so when the Old Maid suggested that we vote only on complimentary qualities, peace was restored, questions made out, and papers distributed; solemn promises being exacted of each Co-Ed that she would first search her heart and test her affections, then tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Oh, the bitter tears that were shed, the brave battles that were fought, and the noble victories that were won over the awful temptations! The poor Old Maid who, as a committee of one, was appointed to collect and tabulate the votes, felt like the Confidential Clerk of a Collapsing Corporation as she saw the poor little foreheads pucker, and the distressed voice of each voter confiding to her her fears about the anger or wounded feelings of Plu or Windy, Monk or Husty, Sticky or Bose, John or Watkins, Luke or Stokes, Fitzs or Gordon, Reid, Sally or Pix, if they found out that she hadn't voted for them.

Then came the task of counting them over, before which even her hardened heart quaked. With mathematical precision she prepared her tally, the list of questions running thus: Who, among the students, is the very handsomest? Who is truly the best dressed? Who is indeed the most energetic? Who is really the most intellectual? Who is actually the most fascinating? Who is undoubtedly the most popular? Who is honestly the best? Who is indisputably the greatest Heart-smasher? As the count progressed, she first opened her eyes, and then turned very pale. What could it mean? There could be no mistake, those girls were dead in earnest; they realized, as fully as did Father George of old, the awful solemnity of truth. So she could do naught but believe it, and make out her report as follows: The vote of the Co-Eds is most remarkably unanimous, most wonderfully uniform, really unique, for it is actually a unit; and by it they have decided that the handsomest, the best dressed, the most energetic, the most intellectual, the most fascinating, the most amorous, the most popular, the most heart-smashing, and by all means the best man in College is—O, shades of the Irishman's saint—Patrick!

WHEN you've work to do, boys,
Do it heart and soul.
They who reach the top, boys,
First must climb the pole.

Though you tumble oft, boys,
Never be downcast.
Try and try again, boys,
You'll succeed at last.

Never give it up, boys,
Though your work be hard.
Work and cheerful hearts, boys,
Bring their own reward.

Sketch of the Eumenean Society

LMOST at the same time with the establishment of Davidson College in 1837, sprang into existence the Eumenean Society, a literary institution of which so many of her distinguished alumni are to-day so justly proud. With two such mottos as "Pulchrum est colere mentem," and a Greek motto which being translated means "Truth is lasting and beautiful," always before them inspiring them with high and noble ideals, it is no wonder that so many men have gone forth from her walls who afterwards became illustrious. It is with these that they have armed themselves to meet the stern realities of life.

The society now occupies a spacious and well-fitted hall. Its attractive appearance and the splendid system and order of its meetings make it a delight rather than a duty for its members to attend.

The Eumenean Society has done more to promote the interests of its members and that of the student body than any other student organization. It has always striven to attain a high standard and is representative of the best the college can claim. The Eumenean Society of to-day differs greatly from that of yesterday. Until recent years each officer of the Society was invested with the right and duty of reporting the misconduct of members on the campus and in the class-room, as well as in the Society Hall. Any member committing such offences as the use of profanity, drunkenness, disrespect to a professor, and many others, subjected himself to a severe reprimand or fine. We are glad to say that this practice is no longer necessary, and the Society now takes action only in case of violation of honor.

The meetings are held each Saturday night and each alternate Monday morning. A query is chosen for each Saturday night meeting and debated "pro" and "con" by members selected beforehand. The exercises on Monday morning consist of the reading of essays and the delivery of original and selected speeches.

Three medals are given each year by the Society in order to inspire its members to greater perfection in literary attainments; one to the best essayist, one to the best debater, and the third to the best declaimer. Besides the three medals mentioned the two societies jointly offer an orator's medal to the successful society representative in the oratorical contest at commencement.

On page 86 will be found a complete list of the Society medalists from 1875 to 1899, and of the Society presidents from 1837 to 1900.

Sketch of Philanthropic Society

FROM the inception of this time-honored institution of learning the history of the Philanthropic Society has been that of Davidson College. The early students of the College, recognizing that the theories of the class-room unreduced to practice are of no avail, determined to establish a society wherein they might by practice inculcate those literary and oratorical attainments which are the insignia of every well-rounded man. So in June, 1837, the Phi Society was organized. The work of the Society and the class-room work have become so harmonized and so thoroughly blended that neither the one nor the other could alone attain the high degree of excellence which has for nearly three-fourths of a century been characteristic of them.

The object of the Society—to train men to think quickly and speak fluently, to control themselves and govern others, to respect the talents of others and emulate noble examples, and not only to acquire thoroughness in the literary and oratorical attainments, but also to have as its watchword that inspiring motto, “Vérité Sans Peur,” urging each man in his every action towards a high and noble ideal and fitting him for true citizenship. Meetings are held bi-weekly, Saturday morning being devoted to debate and Monday morning to declamations, essays and orations. Three medals are given annually, the Declaimer’s contest being confined to the lower classes, while the Debater’s and Essayist’s are open to competition by all. The Orator’s is the joint award of the two societies. At Junior speaking the faculty select from each society three representatives, who contend at commencement for this prize, the decision being made by competent judges.

Among the most important work is the maintenance and support of the DAVIDSON COLLEGE MAGAZINE, which is the joint production of the two societies, four editors and a business manager from each society constituting the working force of the magazine. It occupies a high position in the world of college literature, and is a monument of our labors of which we are justly proud.

On the three following pages will be found a complete list of the presidents of the Philanthropic Society, and also a list of the medalists from 1869 to 1899.

Disillusioned

IF THOU didst love me, I could bear the pain
Of parting, though the parting were for aye;

Though I should know that never from this day
Mine eyes should see, my hands should clasp again

The form of my delight. But oh! in vain
Thy looks of dull regret, without one ray

Of that pure light that streamed across my way —
A star that fadeth 'ere the darkness wane.
And if I loved thee? Yea, though thou hadst died,
My love should conquer death, and, spite of Fate,
Through any world that kept me from thy side
My soul would seek and find thee soon or late.
But now my life is struck with sudden cold
Since Love is mortal and young hearts grow cold.

The '99 Football Season.

WITH the year 1899 ended Davidson's first season of real participation in inter-collegiate athletics. True, we were allowed two games off the bill the season before, but this was only granted after the football season had begun and there was no time to secure a coach or make other preparations.

At first glance, one unacquainted with the difficulties under which we labored would say our record was an unsuccessful one. Here it is:

Rockhill, S. C., Oct. 14: Clemson, 10—D. C., 0.

Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 21: U. N. C., 10—D. C., 0.

Davidson, N. C., Nov. 10: Oak Ridge, 6—D. C., 2.

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 17: A. & M., 0—D. C., 0.

Charlotte, N. C., Nov. 29: S. C. C., 0—D. C., 5.

Statesville, N. C., Dec. 2: Morgantown Mutes, 0—D. C. (2nd team), 16.

That is, we won 40 per cent. and lost 60 per cent. of the games played. But let these facts be taken into consideration: It was our first real entrance into intercollegiate football, for, during the past years, the policy of our college has been a "conservative one," and inter-collegiate athletics were frowned upon. Then, too, we were well-nigh fatally handicapped by having no coach. This disadvantage will be readily appreciated by any one who has attended a college which has tried to put out a team under similar circumstances. The percentage of accidents, also, has been overwhelmingly large. Man after man was trained from raw material to a proficient player and laid up from the game by some unlucky hurt. The unusual extent to which this was the case is proved by the fact that only three of the original team played in our last game.

Indeed, it is largely owing to two men—Dr. Martin and Mr. Cromartie—that Davidson was enabled to place a team in the field last season. The influence of their constant presence on the field, and their never-failing enthusiasm off it, held the team at work, and kept up the college-spirit of the student-body so that the disadvantages mentioned above were overcome, and the wearers of the "red and black" have no cause for shame.

When all these facts are taken into consideration, Davidson College can well congratulate itself on the showing its team made. And one thing, above all others, we pride ourselves on purity in athletics. The taint of professionalism (which is doing so much to set the public against intercollegiate contests of all kinds) has not yet appeared at Davidson.

Our banner may have gone down in fair and honorable defeat. It has yet to be sullied by aught that is ungentlemanly or disgraceful.

Springtide

A GLINT of sun and a dash of rain,
And the clover scent in the meadow
fair;
The robin's call in the wood again,
And the bee's glad song in the sun-sweet air.

Yesterday all of the world was gray,
And dun and drear was the storm-swept sky ;
All of the world is gold to-day,
And the south wind laughs as it rustles by.

Crocus and buttercup garland the fields,
Weaving a web of a cloth of gold ;
Each mossy dell in the woodland yields
Violet treasures and ferns untold.

The jasmine sways in the wanton breeze,
Lading with incense the thrilling world ;
Close by the brook stand the dogwood trees,
Flaunting their banners of white unfurled.

The soft sky flecked with its wind-shod mist
Smiles from its vault of shimmering blue,
Greeting the green-clad hills, sun-kissed
And gemmed with a chaplet of glittering dew.

Ah, sweet and fair is the earth below,
And fair and sweet is the sky above ;
And the rivulet sings as its waters flow
The old sweet story of youth and love.

Sonnet

AS STRANGELY sweet as some dim restful dream,
That like a balm upon the wings of sleep
Drops tenderly as tears that angels weep ;
Or like the murmuring of a far-off stream
Singing unceasing 'neath the pale star gleam
Its love song to the violets that peep,
Half hid 'mong tangled vines and mosses deep ;
Yet vaguely bright as the far-flashing beam
Flung earthward from some unknown wandering sun
Into my soul it glides—hope, faith, desire—
I know not what—perchance, God's holy fire—
And life grows fair, and heaven seems almost won.
Then dark again ; but it has made me strong,
And from my soul soars up to heaven a song.

Her Dreams

I SAW her still in cushions rare,
The blooming blush seemed ne'er so fair;
A snowy hand 'neath upturned chin
Did go to prove her thought no sin—
My love was simply dreaming.

I watched her brow ; 'tis ruffled now,
And then so smooth, I knew not how ;
With tickling art the glances danced
And oft toward me a stray one chanced—
My love was sweetly dreaming.

Now while you think it wondrous strange,
Just take my word, and keep the change.
I looked at her, and quick as thought,
A dart in fate's old foundry wrought,
Did strike my love, now dreaming.

With leap of joy I reached her side,
When lo! alas! she let me slide,
That dart, of all left me bereft.
I bowed and quickly, sadly left
His love so madly—dreaming.

Flowers Along the Way

I

N LIFE'S brief role there lurk a thousand ills,
Each day his foot-prints stained doth
leave;
And man's fair cup with sorrow often fills,
Yet flowers bloom along the way.

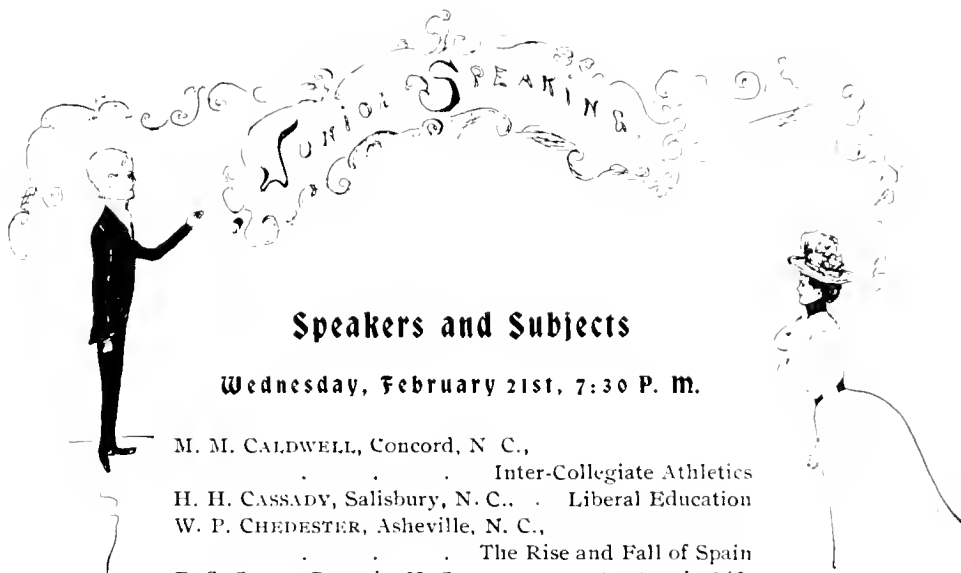

Then, pilgrim lone, thine eyes are sadly veiled

If through each day thou naught doth see

But thorns of mission dire and weakly hailed;
For flowers bloom along the way.

One is fair as rose of morning-crystal bath,
That fades in the arms of gray-haired
Time.

Another blooms, no seeming beauty hath;
These are flowers 'long the way.

A Freshman's Dream

His mother tucked him soft away
In sheets of linen white,
And in her sweetest tones did say,
"My darling boy, good-night!"

He dreamed, and what delights beheld
Within the college walls,
For praise of him was sung full well
Throughout the spacious halls.

He heard the winds with whisper tell
His worth from students all,
"The variety boys will fall pell-mell,"
"He's built to play foot-ball."

And then the scene was changed forsooth
He sat 'twixt ladies two;
Each strove this handsome youth to court,
But found it hard to do.

For ruffling mad his auburn hair
He vowed himself ensnared,
Miss A was seized with a fit of despair,
Miss B her doom declared.

Then into class-room stalking bold,
Was prompt at every call;
And each in turn refused to hold
Him worthy of a FALL.

In short, to tell the splendid dream
Of mamma's little Dan,
To his bright eyes himself did seem
Fine specimen of a man.

In Memoriam—Lake Wiley

HUSHED were the voices of a winter's night,
In silence slept the world,
When swiftly down the stream of might
The hopes of youth were hurled.

What hopes? Just listen while I tell
The sad and sudden end
Of one who ran away pell-mell
Beyond a mortal's ken.

Lake Wiley, bright and fair as morn,
In sleep had laid her head,
When lo! her waters quick were torn
From out their peaceful bed.

Oh, Wiley, dear, sweet Wiley fair
Of glassy bosom, say
How could you in your cold heart dare
To run from us away.

Who thus did tempt a gentle mind
And spoil a world of fun
Remains for th' avenging fates to find
As swift the seasons run.

Our lot is but to stand and sigh
Beside a fertile plot,
All grown with weeds and cat-tails high
Where Wiley's charms are not

A Postal from "Dickie"

Farmville, Va., July 27.

Dear Mr. Yonan:—

I forgot to say to you that if by accident the lightning should strike any of my cows under that big tree, have them bled at once and see Dr. Grey about having them dressed and sold in Charlotte. I hope this will not happen but it might.

With love from us all,

Yours &c.

The Faculty on a Razzle-Dazzle

THE faculty gathered in Old Puss' study, according to their time honored custom, and began sharpening up their wits in conversation preparatory to beginning work. Dickie was discussing the dairy business with Tommy, and was explaining the most approved method of restoring a cow who had been struck by lightning, also how to keep cows from climbing the old chapel steps. Henry Louis was enlightening Long John on the subject of wireless telegraphy, and Bill Joe was breaking the news to Old Puss concerning the rise in the price of eggs. Wooly Puss said nothing but only yawned.

At last Old Puss rapped upon the table, and with a frowning face, called for order. Usually he was very pleasant at faculty meetings and tried to wear his best commencement smile, but he was feeling worried over the rise in the price of eggs and the consequent embarrassment to the Soup House. "Reading of Absentees," he called.

Long John arose and bowed to the president, partly as a mark of courtesy and partly in order to keep from dusting the ceiling with his elevated top piece, and read the following roll :

" C. R. HARDING,
T. P. HARRISON,
W. J. MARTIN."

"These gentlemen will give in their excuses," said Old Puss.

Dickie arose and said, "Mr. President, I regret the necessity, but my wife was sick and I had to mind the baby."

"Do you consider the minding of babies more important than attendance on this august body?" asked the Doctor. "Yes sir! I felt that it was my conscientious duty. The baby was chewing up my new rubbers, and that's an infant industry I don't believe in protecting." Dickie was excused.

Tommy arose next and said, "I was busy making out an examination of seven hundred questions"

Bill Joe arose and said, "I was so busy reading a foot-ball rule book that I forgot." This gentleman was fined a dollar, to which he replied that he would pay the money to the bursar.

"We are now under the order of new business," said the chair. Henry Louis arose, watch in hand, and said, "Gentlemen, I have a proposition which I can set forth in one minute and fifty-nine and nine-tenths seconds. President Kruger writes me that he wishes to found a Boerish College in the Transvaal, and that our college has been recommended as a model. He therefore offers us free transportation if we will all spend next year in starting in operation an institution which he proposes to name "The Jolly Dutchman University." I may say that such a trip would be very valuable. In the first place it would give us all a chance to gain more common sense and also to acquire much Philological and scientific information. I will leave the matter for discussion."

Wooly grunted and replied, "Talk about gaining common sense!

If you would get a little before you start, you wouldn't go to the Transvaal."

"There is something wrong with your premises," said the Logic professor. Henry Louis caught only the last remark and replied warmly, "I'll have you understand, sir, that there is nothing wrong with his premises. I am superintendent of grounds and buildings, and I have examined them most carefully."

"We were speaking logically," said Tommy. "I must say it sounded very illogical," said Henry Louis.

The proposition was agreed to and the time for departure arriving, all of the professors took the train for New York.

On arriving at New York they met a number of Davidson students at the wharf who told them how sad they were feeling—and the steamer was lying to (o).

On the wharf were also a number of book dealers whose eyes were red with weeping. The most melancholy figure was that of Mr. Hines and Mr. Noble who stated to the faculty that if anything should happen to them they would have to make an assignment. Just before the ship started, the news reached the wharf that a great panic was raging in Wall street, owing to the collapse of "the Greek and Latin Pony and Text-book Trust."

But as the ship steamed out the students all managed to refrain from weeping, which shows how well the educated man learns to restrain his feelings. Time sped on and so did the ship. The captain was a jolly old fellow, who told his yarns of land and sea to all who cared to listen. Some of his biggest tales wearied Wooly Puss and disgusted Henry Louis, but Dickie, who had come to learn, took notes and declared that all of the narratives were as plausible as some absence excuses he had heard. One of the captain's stories was concerning a shipwreck, and in the course of his story he said, "Yis sor! we wuz out for twelve days in an open boat and not a bite to eat." "Why didn't you starve?" asked Dickie. "Well, sor, I had a family in the auld coontrie, and whiniver I would get to thinking about thim, a lump would roise in me throat. By swallowing that lump I managed to live." Wooly declared that the lump was easier to swallow than the tale.

The faculty became so seasick that they looked as if they were drunk, and the captain then suggested to Old Puss that he advertise in his next catalogue that Davidson had a full staff of instructors. They were not long full, however for one by one they strode to the railing and looked down upon the briny deep. They were sad themselves, but their loss was the fishes' gain and this was some comfort.

At last the ship began coasting along the shore of Africa, but the weather was stormy and it was impossible to see land. The storm increased into a terrible tempest and at last the ship struck and had to be abandoned. The life-boats were lowered and the captain and crew took one, leaving the other for the faculty. Bill Joe was appointed captain of the life-boat and the members of the faculty took their places at the oars with as much fortitude as if they were about to listen to an inter-society debate. The crew pulled for several hours, and they were finally rewarded, as the day dawned, by the sight of land. It took them some time to effect a landing, and when they finally pulled up on the sandy beach, they were cold, hungry, and exhausted and were beginning to feel discouraged, for they had neither food nor shelter. The various members looked sourly at Henry Louis, but this individual did not lose heart, and soon addressed them:

"Gentlemen of the faculty, do not give up; what we need is to bestir ourselves. As soon as the sun rises we will use the achromatic lenses of my telescope for starting a fire. The principle upon which we work is this: The many rays of light emanating from the photosphere of the sun reach our earth after traveling at the rate of 186,330 miles 3 feet and 1-16 of an inch per second, which is, as you know, faster than a freshman can run from a sophomore's snowball; some of these strike the surface of the lens, are refracted and thus concentrated. In this way we can heat a small surface. I shall ask Mr. Long John to peep over the horizon and tell us how long it will be before the sun will come up."

Long John arose, and after calculating on the sands, said, "that according to Taylor's Theorem the sun would be up in about thirty minutes."

There was a sigh of relief and all were beginning to feel at ease when they were startled by a wild war-whoop and were surrounded by a band of half-naked savages, who seized and bound every member of the faculty and carried them off. They were conducted but a few miles before they reached a rude village and were presented to the Chief. The Chief was a finely built man, and gave them all a hearty welcome. He was especially pleased with Old Puss and invited that dignitary to attend a dining on the following week, and in order that he might be ready for the occasion, he put him in a special coop to fatten, feeding him on the best fowls. His great love for fried chicken soon manifested itself and the King spared neither time nor chickens in getting him ready. No one, unless it were the Roman Emperors, ever fared more sumptuously. The cannibals soon gave up all hopes of building a coop for Long John, and that individual was put to gathering cocoanuts.

The King was very much interested in his banquet and had invited a number of the surrounding tribes to attend. He had provided for the intellectual as well as the physical pleasures of his guests. Henry Louis had offered to give them a lecture on "The Wonders of Electrical Science," after which the Chief had planned to bake the Dickie bird and Martin pie. On the great occasion Henry Louis appeared before the assembly in order to begin his lecture. He had been very fortunate in getting into the Chief's good graces and out of the coop, and also in finding a number of water-tight boxes containing some of his scientific apparatus which had washed ashore. He was feeling very much disgusted with the natives for stealing some of his specimens of rock salt, and told the thieves that they were entirely too fresh. On account of this episode, he thought best to begin the entertainment with a phonographic reproduction of the classic solo,

"Some folks say that a nigger won't steal."

He had learned enough of the language of the natives and his remarks were about as follows:

"I wish to show you some of the wonders of electrical science. I shall ask the whole company to clasp hands and receive a shock from this battery."

The natives gathered around, and after all had clasped hands he turned on the full current. There was a howl loud enough to shake the cocoanuts off the trees and even to vibrate the upper air so violently as to knock off Long John's hat.

As soon as the current was broken there was a stampede in every direction and in a short time not a Negro could be seen anywhere within a radius of twenty miles, although Long John looked most carefully. The faculty launched the life-boat and put out to sea. They had little difficulty in running into the path of a large steamer, for Long John kept a sharp lookout.

The Faculty on a Razzle-Dazzle

—Continued

They were soon picked up and reached their destination in fine spirits. Kruger received them with open arms and lost no time in starting them to work in founding the college. The natives showed some marks of stupidity, a number of them being willing to read twenty pages of Latin in a lesson, while others didn't know enough to laugh at the very best jokes told to the psychology class, and which had been appreciated by the ancients thousands of years before.

On the whole, however, the college was a success, and when the year was over Kruger cheerfully paid them up and as cheerfully sent them home rejoicing.

Hereafter no one of them will have to gain attention in the class room by saying "When I was abroad," but they can say "When I was with Kruger"; nor need they say "When I was in Turkey," but they will rather, say "When I escaped being in the soup."

A Valentine

Among the valentines which were sent by Davidson students last Valentine Day was the following, sent by two Sophomores :

Whatever words I write to you
You may be very sure they're true,
For to deceive would never do,
Since liars soon their lies will rue.

And so if I say I love you
I trust that you'll believe ;
To doubt me is above you—
You know I'll not deceive.

But now, over this little note
I trust you will not fret,
Far from my mind this is remote—
I haven't said it yet.
